It was her chance to show him a little of what she likes. Lily Vatter, 31, began her shopping spree a little over a week ago. She and "husband" Derek Griggs, a barber in the city, returned from a weekend in Seattle on Sunday. The trip was meant to rekindle their romance and celebrate their upcoming wedding. "We were supposed to get married," Vatter said. "He surprised me with tickets for the upcoming Seahawks game. We were just going to watch it together." Vatter said she had planned out the trip in small steps. She hoped that the Seattle experience might reignite their relationship. But upon arrival, Griggs found a bottle of liquor from a party in their hotel room and started drinking. After that, Vatter said, they left to shop at the shopping centre called Japantown. It was there, Vatter said, that they began necking wine from a bottle. She remembers, however, that despite the booze, she recalled thinking, "They were both actually pretty good." The two then went to a nearby gym, and Vatter said, "He took me back to his hotel room for about 10 minutes and we got in bed." "Then he got up and told me he had to get to work." Vatter said she got dressed and left the room. "I had on a short dress and I went and sat at Starbucks across the street," she said. When she returned, she said, Griggs had left to spend more of the $10,000 he had given her. "His hotel room was empty," she said. "He
