Its basically a log for the application. I was wondering what is the best way to make a call to the append file every time a new file is added. Should I use a FileSystemWatcher or is there a better way? A: FileSystemWatcher It runs in the background and is triggered by file changes. This gives you the ability to catch events for different types of changes like file deletions and file additions as well as file move and file rename. For more information check FileSystemWatcher WindowsService Another approach is to create a windows service in your application that executes a command line tool using Process.Start() method to append your file. You can find a sample solution by this link. This way you can write a single class and just start this app in your application whenever you need append a file. A: You are right that it's a good way to approach this. To answer the specific question: The FileSystemWatcher will not update your file without your intervention. It might give you the chance to send the file to a physical repository (e.g. FTP server) once you open the file, but that's about it. To make a long story short, that's the general idea. I can't tell you if that's the best way to approach this, but I'll go ahead and answer your question. :)
